FAQ's	1. Are you willing to provide your name and contact details? Yes/No. If No, you can still make a disclosure anonymously. 2. If the discloser asks what protection is available to them, the following information will be provided. This is precautionary step. A disclosure that qualifies for protection, is one in which the discloser of the information has reasonable grounds to suspect that the information being reported indicates that the company is suspected of misconduct, improper state of affairs (unethical behaviour), dishonest or illegal activity. Anyone making a protected disclosure is protected from civil or criminal liability for making the disclosure. For example, an employee who breaches a confidentiality clause in their employment agreement in order to make a protected disclosure could not be sued or terminated by their employer for breaching that agreement. If you are terminated by your employer for making a protected disclosure the court has the power to reinstate you. On the other hand reporting misconduct, you participated in won't give you immunity from liability for the misconduct. You may still be liable for any misconduct you took part in, regardless of whether you later reported it as a whistleblower. The Corporations Act makes victimisation of whistleblowers an offence. If you are victimised because you have made a protected disclosure your employer may investigate and prosecute those involved in your victimisation. Additionally, someone who suffers damage as a result of victimisation may be entitled to seek compensation through the Courts.
